Walking Woes

Incompetent pedestrians grind Karen's gears

As the wise Peter Griffin said: You know what really grinds my gears? Inconsiderate pedestrian traffic. Particularly people who insist on walking side-by-side to talk and ignore everyone around them, forcing passers-by to step into the mud or the gutter of the street to get by them.

It's not so bad in wide open areas, like Bosco Student Plaza, but these jerks insist on walking two or three abreast on narrow sidewalks, babbling away without a care in the world. I think the most annoying place this happens is on the little bridge in Quinlan Nature Area. The bridge is very narrow; there's just enough room for two people to pass by one another, so logic dictates you walk single file so that oncoming traffic can pass.

They don't. They continue to walk side by side, not even making eye contact with the poor soul trying to go the other way. I can't tell you how many times I've seen someone start to cross that bridge, hesitate when they see two or three people crowded together and coming his way. When the victim realizes this gang isn't going to make room for him, he's either forced to go back and wait on the bank for them to pass, or plow through and get jostled by the bunch of morons on who, apparently, didn't even see them.

I've witnessed similar happenings in stairwells and doorways. They're not as common as the sidewalk hogs, but occasionally I run into a group of people on the stairs who are going the opposite way I am and we collide because they're all walking side-by-side, taking up all the room.

And then you have the idiots who run into someone they know and stop walking, wherever they are, to talk. They forget that they're standing in the middle of a doorway or in the middle of the hallway. You know the type. They just stop abruptly, right in front of you, and start talking to their friend. Their friend does the same thing, and since they're standing right next to each other, they are completely blocking the door, hall, elevator or whatever it is that you're trying to get through.

Here's what gets me the most though: they're not doing it on purpose to be rude, they just don't notice. The only thing that's on their mind is, "Oh, there's my friend So-and-So, I must talk to them right now." I guess there's not enough room in their head for more than one thought at a time, so it doesn't occur to them that all these people saying "excuse me" in an annoyed tone of voice and squeezing past are doing so for a reason.

I blame their parents. Little kids have tunnel vision and don't notice other people, unless the kid just happens to be staring at them. That's why they always seem to walk right out in front of you in a crowded room and don't see you, despite the fact that you're twice as big as they are. I don't know how you could possibly miss something that's twice your size and walking right past you, but I remember the same thing happening to me when I was a small child, and you know what? My parents taught me to pay attention.

Whenever I started wandering around in a crowded mall or something, my dad would gently take my arm and pull me aside a couple of feet, saying, "Pay attention, there are people trying to walk here."

Whenever we ran into a friend and stopped to talk to them, dad would move us over to the wall, saying, "Let's talk over here so we're not in everyone else's way."

Wow. It's so simple, yet so hard for people to grasp.

So, the next time you walk down the sidewalk with your friend, look around. If people walking toward you are stepping into the grass or the street, it means you're in the way. The next time you run into a friend in the hallway and stop to talk to them, take two measly little steps over to the side.

There would be much less gear grinding for everyone out there if pedestrians just paid attention to what's going on around them.

Movie lacks Walt Disney magic

"The Princess and The Frog"

Movie review by Patrick Bales

As many of you already know, Disney has always had a history of delivering spectacular animated adventures, full of fun characters, thrilling action and magical song-and-dance numbers. We really saw these films come full circle in the late 1980s and '90s with films like "The Little Mermaid" and "The Lion King."

Then in 1995, a little movie called "Toy Story" was released, and it changed animation forever. Soon, more and more animated movies turned to computer animation and the age of hand-drawn Disney musicals died with 1998's "Mulan."

It's been a long 11 years, but Disney has finally delivered something that's sure to entertain children, as well as provide a little nostalgia for us college students who grew up with the '90s beloved classics. "The Princess and the Frog" certainly isn't the greatest Disney musical, but it's nice to see Disney going back to what made them such a huge success in the first place.

The movie takes place in New Orleans, where a poor waitress named Tiana (Anika Noni Rose) is saving her money to open a dream restaurant in the heart of downtown. Her life takes an awkward direction, however, when Prince Naveen (Bruno Campos) arrives. After Naveen is turned into a frog by the evil voodoo witch doctor, Dr. Lucifer (Keith David), and he sees Tiana dressed in a stunning princess outfit, he proposes that she should kiss him to break the spell. However, when they finally go for the smooch, both of them become frogs, and the search for a way to revert back to human form begins.

You can tell just by the plot this film is Disney's attempt at a throwback. The great thing about it is they do just about everything right.

First of all, the characters were well-developed and hysterical. I loved everyone, from the sinister Dr. Lucifer to the trumpet-playing Louis the Alligator. The actors gave their characters some depth and dimension (including heart-throbbing chemistry between Rose and Campos), and the screenwriters make sure to keep the laughs coming at a consistent pace.

Sure, this ragtag team will probably not be as memorable as gangs from movies like "The Jungle Book" or "Beauty and the Beast," but then again, very few movies have a cast that memorable. These characters do just fine at drawing you into the story.

I was hoping after watching the film, a song from it would pop into my head and I'd be singing it for two weeks straight. But that didn't happen. While the songs are decently catchy, and the jazzy style is certainly a nice departure from Disney's "musical theater" scores, there just isn't a song that stands out.

In fact, there really isn't anything that particularly stands out in "The Princess and the Frog," and that's the main problem. It was like the executives at Disney had a checklist for how to make a fun Disney movie. "Does the movie have a likable and familiar plot line? Check. Does the movie have a romance between the two main characters? Check. Does the movie teach the audience a lesson at the end? Check."

It all felt a little too cold and calculated. There were no risks taken, and no grand scenes to floor you into Disney heaven.

Maybe my expectations are a little high, but when a company delivers movie magic for so many years, and then throughout the 2000s, has Pixar come up with are just as brilliant in their own way, the bar has to be raised high. "The Princess and the Frog" misses the mark.

As long as you lower your expectations, you'll find a lot to enjoy in Disney's latest entry. The music is decently catchy, the characters are wonderfully quirky, and the whole movie feels like its 100 percent Disney.

It's about time, right?

'Bounty Hunter' scores a cut below the rest

"The Bounty Hunter"

Movie review by Aaron Weiser

Gerard Butler and Jennifer Aniston team up in Andy Tennant's new comedy, "The Bounty Hunter," which follows the fated matching of a divorced couple struggling to do their jobs.

Butler plays Milo Boyd, an on-the-job bounty hunter living the not-so-wonderful life chasing down parole jumpers for a never-steady paycheck. He is given the assignment of his dreams — to chase down and turn in his ex-wife on a bond.

Nicole Hurley, played by Aniston, is a journalist rising through the ranks by devoting her entire life to work. Having been summoned to traffic court for an incident involving a police officer, Hurley skips out of her hearing and the judge revokes her bail.

On the run from the law and chasing down her snitch, Hurley concludes that recent police officers' stories about a recent suicide are not adding up. Certain foul play is involved, Hurley gets in too deep and it is up to Boyd to save her.

Struggling to protect Hurley as he takes her back to jail, Boyd realizes the full weight of their situation as the couple is forced to a bed and breakfast from the past, to work through their issues in order to stay alive now.

Based on a rather fun premise, "Bounty Hunter" is a delightful comedy of awkward meetings. A wildly destroyed marriage brought back together by the interaction of law enforcement and reckless driving. This film will brighten your

While well-directed, the movie seemed to lack a special characteristic about it to set it apart from other romantic comedies of its time. The movie was fairly predictable and without the power of its main stars, it would have been a letdown.

Romantic comedies, having shared a generally similar structure in the past few years, all pull toward mediocrity without an above-par idea to separate them from the pack. With a unifying theme undermining these movies, it makes the director's job more difficult in portraying a unique point of view. This movie lacked such a sub-story and without such, I believe it falls below the expectations I had going in.

While good for some laughs, the movie leaves you feeling average and a little less rich in the books. But if you are a fan of Aniston or Butler, it might be worth seeing.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

More focus on policy necessary

As a conservative in the land of journalism, I am undoubtedly in the minority. When discussions in the newsroom degenerate into Bush-bashing, I generally keep working instead of arguing with those whose minds are made up.

Today, however, I'm ending my reticence. After reading two more articles in the opinion section of the Collegian that criticized and generalized Republicans, I would like to respond. I want the newspaper to have an article from a conservative perspective for a change.

First, I will address David Rose's article in which he said the Tea Party groups and Republicans feed off one another in a vicious circle. Allow me to let you in on a little secret: most Republicans would oppose universal health care regardless of whether there are protesters.

Why? Because Republicans believe in capitalism, where businesses compete and competition drives innovation. Such competition produces more options and better-quality services and products. Also, with the nationalization of health care, a huge business sector is taken away from private enterprise and given to the government. Republicans traditionally believe in less government interference and fewer handouts.

According to Rose's article, Rep. Devin Nunes, R-Calif., responded to vulgar protests by saying people have the right to say what they want, but Nunes also called the comments inappropriate. Rose said Nunes never should have condoned the comments. However, stating the right of free speech and calling comments inappropriate are not synonymous with condoning them.

As far as the Tea Party movement itself, when was the last time you were around a heated crowd and did not hear extremely derogatory comments? If you have been to any sports event in your life, you know this is true. The point is that the people who scream obscenities at players and referees are not an accurate representation of all the students, faculty, alumni and families that attend games. In the same way, the most radical of Tea Party protesters do not represent and should not be portrayed as everyday Republicans.

Moving on to the article by Myles Ikenberry. I agree people should help the poor. However, I do not think the government should automatically take money individuals earn and distribute it at its discretion. To all college students who favor the idea of "a more equitable distribution of wealth," let me pose a question.

You will probably get married one day. You might have a couple kids. More than likely, you will have a place of residence and probably a vehicle or two. If you make $100,000 a year, how will you feel about having a minimum of $30,000 of it go to the federal government in taxes? That is, before you pay state income tax, home insurance, car insurance, health insurance, property tax and myriad other expenses.

Another good example of what "redistributing the wealth" really means goes like this: Let's say that instead of assigning grades based on effort, a professor takes the class average and gives that grade to everyone in the class. It would not matter whether you studied and attended every class and earned an A, or Facebooked through each recitation and got Cs and Ds; your grade would be the same. Does that motivate anyone? No. Is that "fair"? No, of course not.

So how can people justify taking 30 to 40 percent of someone's income just because it is larger than their own? Do CEOs and professional athletes make ridiculous, obscene amounts of money? Yes, absolutely. Does that entitle you, or me, or anyone else to more of their money? No.

As far as the remarks in Ikenberry's last paragraph about how it is not easy for Republicans to accept higher taxes, smaller houses, less expensive cars and less exotic vacations, let's think all the way around this. Are no Democrats rich? How about Hollywood in general? And I'm fairly certain most of those Democratic congressmen are doing all right as well.

Ikenberry stated it is easy for Republicans to "picket with condescending pro-life signs and self-righteously declare their moral superiority and indignation to the world." Wait a minute. Isn't this the same article in which he stated, "the positions of Democrats have a higher moral and logical consistency?" It seems to me this last paragraph condemning Republicans at large is quite condescending, and saying his position is more moral sounds quite similar to declaring moral superiority. Does it not?

I have zero problem with liberal articles in the newspaper. That's a product of free speech, the same free speech that allows me to have my conservative article in the paper. I would, however, appreciate it if people would focus more on policy and solutions and less on condemning the opposition.

TSA creates headaches for travelers

Marshall B. Frey

Like many of you, last week's Spring Break brought well-deserved freedom and relaxation. Or so I thought.

In actuality, last week's attempt at a getaway soon turned into a giant headache as soon as I hit airport security and was pulled aside for special security detail. In fact, the more and more I fly, the more and more I find that airport security is growing into the Department of Motor Vehicles. Let me explain.

I started my Spring Break by driving to Oklahoma City to catch a flight to Houston to visit for four days. Being that it is just as much of a pain to check a bag as it is to carry it on, I decided to save some time and head straight for the security check point. After stripping down to my socks and removing my belt, I placed my bags on the conveyor belt. The Transportation Security Administration agent didn't even bother to ask me to remove my toiletry bag from my suitcase. Easy enough, I thought to myself. However, coming back was a much different story.

I have had the privilege to visit many airports and cities, and I have to say that Hobby Airport in Houston is perhaps my least favorite. OK, that is an understatement. I despise Hobby.

As I checked in for my 6:55 a.m. flight on Thursday, the line for the security checkpoint rivaled that of the recently passed health care bill. Soon I found myself being escorted into a separate security station, where the TSA agent began wiping my hands with a piece of paper to test for explosives — keep in mind all of this was done without asking. Then, after my bags went through the scanner, the TSA agent informed me that my hair gel was over the acceptable limit and that my nail clippers were a weapon and must be disposed of. Remember that TSA didn't even bother to check these in Oklahoma City. Do you see any inconsistency here?

Now fast forward to last Saturday. I was traveling with several K-State students to a convention in Chicago. After battling through a blizzard at 3 a.m. to reach Kansas City, I passed through security with relative ease. However, I wish I could say the same for my friend who was traveling with me. It turns out he had neglected to remove his pocket knife from his bag. After much discussion with the TSA agents, they informed him that he would be allowed to carry his knife on board since it was less than four inches long. Aren't these the same people who threw away my nail clippers?

If you travel often I am sure that you echo my sentiments. Airport security is perhaps the most inconsistent thing since Shaquille O'Neal at the free throw line. Depending on location, various items are allowed to pass through security while others are idiotically withheld from passengers. Not to mention TSA agents are hardly ever friendly or professional.

Don't get me wrong — I appreciate what they do and how they keep our nation safe. God knows that I wouldn't want to sift through luggage every day and deal with upset travelers. But the regulations need to be streamlined and equally enforced in every airport across the country, regardless of size. Doing so would increase passenger awareness and speed up the security screening process.

And I'd still have my nail clippers.

Prop. 2 provides necessary animal rights

Beth Mendenhall

Animal agriculture is key to the health of the overall economy, decreased meat production will increase food prices across the board, Proposition 2 requires free-range environments, California voters didn't consider its economic consequences, and the "real aim" of Proposition 2 was to drive California's farmers out of business.

Proposition 2 will affect the economy, but not unbeknownst to voters. It provides many benefits to animals that are worth considering. California voters seem to think so, anyway.

It's never a good idea to leave the type and degree of regulation to those with an explicit profit-motive. That's like letting car companies decide safety standards because they understand vehicles better than Congress — it will always benefit producers to the detriment of consumers, because it's cheaper to cut corners.

Proposition 2 — like all California ballot initiatives — was preceded with an extended voter information campaign, which included a guide presenting the best arguments on both sides and directing voters to external sources of information. Lastly, if California voters aren't qualified to decide how their food is raised, is Jessica Hensley really qualified to give us advice about the economy?

California voters have obviously concluded that they don't want businesses to exist that treat animals cruelly. If farmers can't meet the basic standards in Proposition 2, they should switch to a different industry. The idea that animal agriculture is a crucial part of the overall economy is laughable. Its lack of expansion — pre-Prop 2 and in other states — means it can't provide the millions of jobs Americans so desperately need. It didn't save us from the housing crises, and it can't save us now.

Even if animal agriculture was critical to the economy, the effects of Proposition 2 are exaggerated. All it requires is veal calves, sows and chickens have enough space to stand up, spread their wings if they have them, and turn around. That's an extremely low standard, and not the same as "free range" or cage-less farming.

Plus, Proposition Two gives farmers until 2015 to meet the regulations, allowing them to phase out current practices rather than requiring a large and immediate expenditure.

Even if Proposition 2 decreases animal agriculture production, the effect on food prices is more likely to be a positive one. Animal agriculture requires vast amounts of arable land to grow feed crops. Fewer animals to feed means grain farmers will have to switch to crops that feed humans rather than animals. The increase in grain production for humans means even if meat prices go up, bread prices will go down. So will the prices of products made with corn (everything). Most impoverished people couldn't afford meat anyway, and most Americans could do with one less fatty hamburger every week.

Billions of animals are raised and slaughtered every year. Giving them room to turn around, spread their wings and stand up can make a torturous experience a bearable one. These animals are more intelligent than many of our pets.

Ignoring their perspective while we buy toys, beds and sweaters for our cats and dogs makes us either irrational or selective sociopaths.

neither squad could establish an advantage. With the score knotted at 67-67 and time running out in regulation, Pullen put together his own 5-2 run, but an inopportune foul by Chris Merriewether put Xavier's Terrell Holloway on the free throw line with five seconds remaining. Holloway connected on all three free throws and sent the game into overtime.

The Musketeers (26-10) needed more buzzer-beating magic at the end of the first overtime period, as Jordan Crawford launched a 35-footer that sliced through the net with four ticks left on the clock. Clemente got an open look, but his jumper clanked off the rim as the buzzer sounded.

Crawford, who recently landed in the national spotlight thanks to solid postseason performances, finished with a game-high 32 points.

"Every time [Crawford] put one up, I was like, 'please miss,'" Judge said. "That's all you can do. It was a great game."

ran down. K-State clinched the victory with free throws in the game's final seconds.

"At the end of the day, we've just got to win and I'm happy," senior center Luis Colon said. "We've got the opportunity to win a championship. It was a relief in my heart because I don't want my career to be over without a championship. I've never got one in my life and this is one of my few opportunities."

In the opening period, K-State exploded out of the gate on both sides of the ball. The Wildcats went on a 17-0 scoring run and forced an Xavier scoring drought of over seven minutes to jump out to a 19-4 lead midway through the period. But the Musketeers came charging back, as a deep 3-pointer by Dante Jackson ignited a 23-9 spurt that cut the Wildcats' lead to 28-27.

Jacob Pullen, who netted a career-high in K-State's second-round game against Brigham Young, appeared as though he'd remain hot as he knocked down 10 early points, but he was forced to go to the bench after picking up his second foul with 4:11 remaining in the half. Fouls and turnovers beset the Wildcats as they continued to struggle from the field until halftime. Xavier closed out the period on a 5-2 run and took a 32-31 lead into the locker room.

When it was all said and done, Samuels, who entered the game with just two total points in the NCAA Tournament, took a moment to reflect on the intensity of the game, calling it one of the best he's ever witnessed.

"We're extremely tired at the moment," Samuels said. "It should be on ESPN Classic tonight. I'll check, but I doubt it though."

Health week to be held on campus

Mayra Rivarola | COLLEGIAN

K-State Healthy Decisions is sponsoring a week-long series of events to promote available resources on campus for students to live a healthier lifestyle.

“It’s the first year that we have this wellness week,” said Madison Horsch, sophomore in life sciences and pre-med. “There’s a lot of students can learn that can really help them out.”

Throughout the week, the group will be hosting a dance performance, a comedian, free massages, yoga, financial counseling and informational tables.

The events seek to address the different areas in the life of a person that need to be taken care of as part of a so-called wellness wheel, Horsch said.

The wellness wheel includes the physical, emotional, social, intellectual, occupational, cultural and spiritual aspect of a person’s life. Students should be aware that every aspect of the wheel needs to be taken care of in order to be healthy as a whole, she said.

“We want to give back to students,” Horsch said. “We want to show them what healthy decisions can do for them in different areas of their lives.”

ACCIDENT

A three-vehicle accident Wednesday evening resulted in two transports to Mercy Regional Health Center, according to Lt. Herbert Crosby Jr. of the Riley County Police Department.

The accident occurred at about 7:25 p.m. at Allen and Casement Roads.

Katie Brayton, 22, of 2215 College Ave Apt. 313D, was driving a 2001 Pontiac Grand Am and failed to yield at a stop sign. Brayton’s vehicle was then struck by a 2001 Dodge Stratus driven by Mohammad Al-Wabel, 34, of 1300 E. Marlatt Apt. 804. Brayton’s vehicle then flipped around and struck a 2003 Buick LeSabre driven by Annette Muths, 52, of 1010 Humboldt #3.

Riley County Emergency Medical Services transported Brayton and her passenger, Edgar Nelons, 37, of 731 Griffith Drive Apartment B, to Mercy Regional Health Center.

Brayton was cited for failure to yield at a stop sign, according to Crosby.

STOLEN CAR TRANSPORT TRAILER

A car transport trailer was reported stolen by Third Street U-Haul, 917 N. 3rd.

According to Crosby, the trailer was stolen between February 24 at 3 p.m. and February 12 a.m. The trailer is silver and orange with a Tennessee tag. The trailer was not initially reported as stolen because officials at Third Street U-Haul were waiting to see if it turned up at another U-Haul location, Crosby said.

Events will recognize disabilities

Mayra Rivarola | COLLEGIAN

In an effort to educate students and faculty about disability issues, the K-State Disability Support Services is hosting a series of events from March 28 to April 3.

“Our whole objective is to increase awareness about people with disabilities,” said Jaclyn Anderson, assistant director of DSS. “We want to spread awareness about how they are really part of the tapestry of our society.”

The theme of the week, CreateAbility, is focused on the contributions that people with disabilities have made in the arts, even though not all of the events will be related to the arts, Anderson said.

On Sunday, the week is set to kick off in the Derby Dining Center lobby from 6 to 8 p.m. with a free meal, games and prizes. There will also be a few tables on assisted technology and independent living, she said.

The office will also sponsor a disability rights timeline from March 28 to April 3 on the second floor of the Union, where the history of civil rights for people with disabilities will be shown in pictures.

The Union Program Council is sponsoring a film called “Adam,” about a man who has Asperger’s syndrome. The movie is scheduled to be shown at 7 p.m. in the Little Theatre.

An assistance dog exhibition is scheduled on Tuesday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Union Courtyard, where people can see the trained animals and how they assist people with disabilities.

A 1978 K-State graduate and a recognized paralympian nominated to the President’s Council on Physical Fitness, Kevin Saunders, is planning to speak Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom about goal setting and accomplishing those goals while facing adversity.

To wrap up the week, DSS, Healthy Decisions and UPC are sponsoring a Lunchtime Lounge Friday, featuring various performances and awards presented to faculty or staff members for their efforts to increase accessibility on campus.

Also on Friday, “Candyland: The Musical” is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at the Manhattan Arts center. The cast for the musical includes individuals with developmental and physical disabilities.

concert in Bosco Student Plaza to promote Christian hip-hop, according to the bill.

The group requested $2,900 and the committee recommended the full amount to the senate.

“This kind of allocation at the end of the year is conscientiously shocking,” said senator Tanner Banion, graduate student. “It’s just not appropriate, I would think.”

The allocation, if it had passed, would have been one of the largest made to a group this year.

Banion said he felt like the allocation was held for the end of the year in the hopes that the Allocation Committee’s purse strings would not be as tight as the beginning of the year.

“This allocation was not one of our final allocations,” Kirkland said. “The amount of money was heavily talked about and overall, we, as a committee, felt the amount of money recommended to them was fair and adequate.”

The allocation failed to pass the Senate, however.

Cats open Big 12 play with Oklahoma State

Blake Thorson | COLLEGIAN

The Big 12 season has arrived for the K-State baseball team as they look to continue an impressive home stand with a three-game series against the Oklahoma State Cowboys.

The Wildcats have been successful through their non-conference slate on their way to a 16-3 record and found themselves ranked 25th in the coaches’ poll two weeks ago before a midweek loss to Creighton.

Both Kansas State and Oklahoma State are receiving votes in the coaches’ and NCBWA polls this week and both teams have posted impressive resumes thus far.

The Cowboys come in with a record of 14-3 and have won nine of their last 10. Last week they went 2-1 against Alabama A&M University, including a 26-0 win in the second game of the series.

For the Cats, it has been a solid combination of clutch hitting, base running, pitching and defense that has contributed to their non-conference success. However, the Cowboys pose the biggest challenge Brad Hill and his club have faced all season.

“I’ve always believed in being a multi-faceted team and I think we’ve done that so far,” Hill said.

Based on the numbers put up by his team this season, Coach Hill’s claim holds true as the Cats rank in the top half of the Big 12 in team pitching, batting and fielding. The Bat Cats rank second in team batting average, fourth in team ERA and third in fielding percentage.

Maybe the biggest reason for the Wildcats’ success has been the emergence of a solid weekend starting pitching staff. That staff, comprised of senior right-hander Ryan Daniel, sophomore right-hander Evan Marshall and junior left-hander Kyle Hunter, has compiled a record of 11-0 on the season and a combined ERA of 2.44.

“Our starting staff all believes in each other so it is pretty easy to feel confident,” Marshall said. “The staff took it upon themselves this offseason to not walk people.”

This has been evident all season as K-State leads the nation in fewest walks per nine innings with 1.82. Marshall has surrendered only two walks in 33.2 innings pitched on the year.

At the plate, preseason All Big-12 shortstop Carter Jurica has been superb as he ranks in the top 10 in five different categories in the Big 12. Sophomore center fielder Nick Martini has continued his success from his freshman All-American campaign and carries a .351 average and a conference-leading 16-game hitting streak into today’s game.

K-State has also heated up the basepaths as they once again lead the Big 12 in stolen bases with 47, including a team-leading 12 from Jurica.

First pitch today is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. at Tointon Family Stadium.

Daniel (5-0) is scheduled to start against Cowboys senior Tyler Lyons (2-0), who carries a 1.99 ERA into the game. Live stats can be found at kstatesports.com and radio coverage will be available via SportsRadio 1350 KMAN.

When to go pro an individual choice

Rational decision – making is what drives us through our day. Weighing benefits and costs of every day choices keeps us from making those choices we will regret down the road. Such a concept is not foreign to the realm of college sports, nor is it new in any way, shape or form to the challenging lives the athletes endure.

As all eyes have been locked on the Big 12 this basketball season, we are nearing the end of another season of college basketball. It marks the beginning of the road for a few players, who will be forced to make some of the most difficult decisions of their lives.

When the season ends, after the national championships are crowned and the arenas empty once again, the student athletes reflect and prepare for another season in the making. But in select cases, when a player or team has performed particularly well, he must choose whether to stay or go.

For contrasting measure, look at two cases that hit close to home. Two years ago, freshman star Michael Beasley led the Wildcats to a second-round NCAA tournament game, which the Wildcats lost to Wisconsin, and Beasley soon said his goodbyes to Manhattan, Kansas.

Last year, the decision by All-American Sherron Collins and Cole Aldrich to stick around for this season en route to a national championship has left the duo both sad and empty-handed in the nation's heartland.

On one hand, there is the opportunity to move into a career and make money, altogether avoiding a situation filled with uncertainty. The other option offers another chance at that championship ring and the hope of a great year of basketball in a place you know and love.

Trying to quantify the value of certainty is no simple chore. There are as many what ifs as there are fans in the stands. Then the only logical conclusion is that the actual worth of staying for another year versus going to the draft is up to the individual's personal feelings and situation.

A laundry list of complaints has come from fans all over who think the situation should have been reversed, believing that they can judge what a player should do. It is so easy to pass judgment on those whose lives are so different from our own.

While it might never be clear how to survey the true worth of a player's decision to stay for another year at college or bypassing the opportunity to get hurt and heading to the NBA, it is clear that we should learn to respect that decision more often.

While we watch the tournament play out this weekend and we look to our own faithful Wildcat team, we must wonder who will ponder the glorious life above and beyond Manhattan. There is a wonderful amount of tutelage still left in the capable hands of Frank Martin, as we have been able to experience firsthand this season.

Worth the Wait

Senior guard Denis Clemente passes the ball around Xavier guard Terrell Holloway in Thursday night's game. The Wildcats won in double overtime to advance into the Elite Eight.

Cats two OT win makes memorable story

Grant Guggisberg | COLLEGIAN

SALT LAKE CITY – From now on, when you do a Google search for the words March Madness, you ought to find the replay of Thursday's win over Xavier.

K-State's 101-96 double-overtime victory was epic on so many levels. Easily the most competitive and exciting game of this NCAA tournament, it featured two teams that were unwilling to back down, and unwilling to lose.

This game had the complete cast of characters to make the perfect fairy tale.

A hero: Jacob Pullen. Ending with 28 points, the junior guard single-handedly knocked down the biggest of big shots to send his team to victory in two overtimes.

It had a villain. Pullen's counterpart, Xavier's Jordan Crawford, matched Pullen shot for shot, scoring 32 points and knocking down not one, but two deep 3-point buzzer beaters to keep his team in the game.

Both sides had supporting characters, with Denis Clemente's 25 points keeping K-State close during the second half when Pullen was on the bench with foul trouble. Xavier had Terrell Holloway, who finished with 26 points and went on a tear towards the end of the game, draining all the shots necessary to keep the game within striking distance.

The setting was perfect, with an arena half full of Xavier fans – at least for the day – cheering every time one of the Musketeers hit a big shot. Some wore orange, others wore Butler t-shirts, but everyone not wearing purple was cheering on the Musketeers.

Then there was the large contingent of K-State fans, who made the 1,000-mile journey to Utah to see the team win its biggest game of the season. They went crazy every time Pullen hit a three to keep the team close, and even crazier when the final buzzer sounded.

Of course, it wasn't always a time for celebration.

From the start, this one was K-State's for the taking. They came out with more energy, better defense and superior rebounding. Quickly building a double-digit lead, K-State was suddenly in the driver's seat towards the Elite Eight just eight minutes into the game. At one point, they led 19-4.

Then everything changed. The Wildcats went flat on offense. They started committing fouls and putting the Musketeers at the free throw line. Before they could blink, the first half was over and Xavier had claimed a one-point halftime lead, 32-31. The trend continued in the second half, with a back-and-forth game that left everyone on the edge of their seat.

Coach Frank Martin did more staring and glaring - at both the referees and his own players - than he has in a long time. He was pacing the sidelines and struggling to contain himself during some key stretches of the game.

However, when all was said and done, the game was epic, even if it exposed some of K-State's weaknesses moving forward. They were out-rebounded and also spent much of the game juggling foul trouble, even before the overtime periods.

The Wildcats will now face fifth-seeded Butler, clearly exhausted and running on fumes. Butler had the pleasure of sitting back and watching K-State play deep into the night after they beat Syracuse in the session's first game. Both teams have a day to practice lightly and rest before taking the court Saturday with Final Four berth on the line.

Hopefully for K-State fans, the fairy tale story can continue east toward Indianapolis.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Wildcats continue Big 12 play over weekend

Danny Davis | COLLEGIAN

The Wildcat women's tennis team will compete in two matches this weekend. Today, they play at Nebraska, who is ranked No. 43. Then, on Sunday, they host Iowa State at home.

Today's match at Nebraska is the last in a series of five consecutive road matches. Currently, the Wildcats are on a five match losing streak.

"Obviously we're never happy to lose, but we've made progress," said Head Coach Steve Bietau. "It's going to be big weekend."

Antea Huljev, junior won the first national level victory of her career in her singles match against Texas A&M, Bietau said. It did not come as a surprise, he said, as she had been progressing towards that point for the past month. He believes it is something she has gained confidence from.

"Antea is leading our team with a lot more than her record," Bietau said. "She's our leader in terms of work, terms of commitment and being a great tennis power, perseverance and grinding it out."

Carmen Borau Ramos, freshman, and Ana Gomez Aleman, freshman, won the Wildcat's only doubles victory at Texas A&M. It was the first match they won as a duo together. Bietau said he felt like Ramos and Aleman have done well at taking advantage of opportunities that have been presented to them.

Karla Bonacic, freshman, won a singles match at Texas A&M that improved her record to winning three of her past four matches.

"Karla won a very difficult, hard-fought match at number five against a quality opponent," Bietau said. "It was a much improved performance."

The team lost 0-7 against Texas, ranked 32, and lost 2-5 to Texas A&M. It was the first weekend of Big 12 Conference play for the Wildcats.

"The previous matches are over and done," Bietau said. "We're looking to be competitive and do everything in our power to win this weekend's matches."

Nebraska, he said, will likely be played indoors and the Huskers excel indoors. Iowa State defeated the Wildcats last year for the first time in 16 years.

"The conference is getting better and stronger," Bietau said. "It's just getting tougher every year."

ROWING

Three divisions to compete in San Diego Crew Classic

Sam Nearhood | COLLEGIAN

As the spring season slowly begins to melt the snows of winter, the K-State rowing team will bask in the sun's golden rays and competing in their sport in San Diego, for the San Diego Crew Classic. Well, at least they will be competing. The rest is up to the coaches.

This weekend, the rowing team travels to San Diego to race against a handful of schools from across the nation (and North America) in the varsity, JV and novice divisions. The San Diego Crew Classic – "America's Premier Spring Regatta" – features thousands of athletes, both men and women, in a flurry of 96 races across two days.

First to compete will be the varsity 8+ boat. Two years ago the squad took sixth place at the meet, and last year they showed in third. This year, they race against Sacramento State, the University of British Columbia at Vancouver, Tulsa, Loyola, Sonoma and University of California at Irvine, none of whom are ranked. This contest, scheduled for 8 a.m., will be the first for the women's division Saturday.

The women's JV will compete later against stiff competition for the Jackie Ann Stitt Hungness Trophy. Squads in this race include No. 9 University of Southern California, No. 2 Virginia, Sacramento State and the University of California at Davis. The race is set to begin at 10 a.m.

Novice 8+ will end the day for the Wildcats when they compete at 11 a.m. for the Laurel V. Korholz Perpetual Trophy. K-State will face Oklahoma, the University of San Diego, the University of California at Davis, Cal LW and No. 19 Washington State.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Cats prepare for third tourney

Ashley Dunkak | COLLEGIAN

Yesterday the women's golf team took their practice round in calm 80-degree weather for the Mountain View Collegiate. This is the third tournament of spring and an event K-State has attended and had relative success in for 10 or 11 years, Coach Kristi Knight said.

The ladies traveling this week are seniors Abbi Sunner and Morgan Moon, junior Elise Houtz, sophomore Ami Storey and freshman Hanna Roos.

"The team is excited to be out here, and even though scores tend to be very low out here, you still have to appreciate a par and be patient and play smart," Knight said. "You can't just fire at every flagstick and you still have to play smart golf. We need to hole a few more putts than we did a week ago. I've been encouraged by our play so far this spring."

Knight said the course is one of the shorter golf courses the Wildcats play. She said the approach shots are shorter and there are more birdie opportunities on this golf course. Also, the course is not as penalizing for poor shots as others.

"It's a playable golf course," Knight said. "It's in a resort community. It's one that if you keep the ball in play, if you stay out of the desert and can make a few putts, scores tend to be low here. And usually the conditions are very good."

Knight said she has seen improvement in the team from fall to spring and also since the first two tournaments of 2010.

"The key is we need three or four good scores a day," Knight said. "We haven't really had that yet. We've maybe had it one or two days of the six rounds that we've played. I think we're close. It's just a matter of kind of coming together as a team and getting going on the same day, and I think we can do that."

During Spring Break, the women played in the three-round Northern Migration Invitational in Florence, Ariz. The team finished eighth out of 19 teams with a total score of 18 over par 306. Sunner tied for seventh place after shooting 2 over par 74 in the third round. She placed second among Big 12 individuals.

"I felt very comfortable this week with my game," Sunner said in an article on kstatesports.com. "My swing and putting stroke felt great. Other than a few mishaps, I was very pleased."

Freshman Hannah Roos takes a shot at the Sunflower Invitational on Sept. 28.

MEN'S GOLF

Wildcats head to Texas after showing resiliency in Arizona

Tyler Scott | COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team continued its spring struggles, leading to an 11th place finish at the Desert Shootout last week. It was their second consecutive below-top 10 finish of the year.

The match took place in Goodyear, Ariz., at the par-72 Palm Valley Golf Club comprised of 17 teams. K-State was in second place after the first day with a score of nine-under par 279, but fell to ninth after day two. The team dropped two more spots and finished with an overall score of 10 over par, 874, three strokes behind Boise State and Iowa State.

Head coach Tim Norris said his team showed some fight towards the end.

"I thought the guys did a decent job to try and rally a little bit," Norris said. "This is golf and you have to move forward. It's not what we did last week, it's how we're going to play the next week."

Senior Joe Kinney was the top individual for the Wildcats, recording his third top-five finish of the season as he tied for fifth. He fired a one under par 71 in the final round to finish the tournament with a six under par 210. Senior counterpart Mitchell Gregson closed with a four over par 220 shooting a two over par in the second and third rounds. He tied for 42nd and was third on the team for the tournament.

"This was probably his finest tournament in his four years at K-State," Norris said. "He managed his game well and this will be something he can build upon and it can help us down the stretch."

Senior Joe Ida started off strong in the match shooting a four under par 68 in the first round, but had to withdraw in the second after only playing four holes due to a thumb injury.

Norris said the injury isn't serious and Ida should have plenty of time to get healthy before the next match.

"It's just a bruise and he's getting treatment on it," Norris said. "We just hope it doesn't happen again."

Freshman Curtis Yonke carded

a two over par 74 in the final round. He completed the tournament with a three-round score of one over par 217. It was his lowest 54-hole score of his career as he finished tied for 28th individually.

Junior Jason Schulte rounded out the lineup for the Wildcats shooting a three-round score of 22 over par 238 finishing 95th. Freshman Ben Juffer who competed as an individual finished tied for 88th with an 18 over par 234.

In state rivals Wichita State and Kansas tied for the tournament title with a score of nine under par 855. Eastern Michigan entered the final round in first place, but fell to third following a 12 over par 300 score.

Wichita State Shocker Dustin Garza took home the individual title with a score of 14 under par 202. Nate Barbee of Kansas finished second with a score of 11 under par 205.

The Wildcats will be in action again April 5 - 6 at the Morris Williams Intercollegiate tournament. It will take place at the University of Texas Golf Course in Austin, Texas.

 Wamego Country Club

1900 Country Club Dr., Wamego, KS

Nestled among the rolling hills of Wamego, Kansas this semi-private 18-hole golf course has set itself apart from area courses by offering a unique experience that will make you feel like you're not in Kansas anymore. Originally opened 90 years ago as a nine hole course WCC was expanded to 18 holes in 2004. The original nine holes was designed by famed course architect Chick Trout in 1920 while the "new" nine holes was designed by local architect Eric Langvardt. The original nine holes is a traditional open design similar to a lot of courses in the Midwest. Once you cross Columbian Road to the new nine holes you will feel like you are in the heart of the Ozarks. With it's tree-lined fairways, large greenside grass bunkers and water coming into play on five of the nine holes the back nine is a unique experience that cannot be found anywhere else in Kansas. WCC also offers a wide range of amenities including a fully stocked Pro Shop, bar, banquet room, and outside patio. WCC also offers individual lessons, group clinics and junior golf programs taught by PGA Professional Derek Dultmeier. Beginning in April WCC will offer Buy One Get One FREE Greens Fees with the purchase of a cart on Mondays and Tuesdays before 3:00 pm. Bring a friend and enjoy all that WCC has to offer.
